(redirected from pricking in my thumb) old-fashioned An intuition or premonition about something; a sense of foreknowledge about a situation, condition, or set of circumstances. A reference to a line in Shakespeare's Macbeth: "By the pricking of my thumbs, Something wicked this way comes." I have this pricking in my thumbs that the meeting isn't going to end in our favor. She felt the old, familiar pricking in her thumbs, a sense that something awful was about to happen to someone close to her. Mom doesn't think we should go on our trip—she says she has a pricking in her thumbs that our plane is going to crash.Farlex Dictionary of Idioms. © 2022 Farlex, Inc, all rights reserved. a premonition or foreboding. This expression comes from a speech by the Second Witch in Shakespeare's Macbeth: 'By the pricking of my thumbs, Something wicked this way comes'.Farlex Partner Idioms Dictionary © Farlex 2017See also: Want to thank TFD for its existence? This line occurs after the witches have finished brewing their potion. The witch is referring to the coming of Macbeth to their heath, when he comes to find out more about his prophecy. This shows more of the witches' prophetic powers. In fact, this line is, in my opinion, the most definitive proof of their powers up until this point. The prophecy at the beginning could be said to have caused what happened by giving Macbeth the ambitious drive to be king, instead of just predicting it. This, however, is a prediction of Macbeth coming that is based on "the pricking of [her] thumbs."

Another important aspect of this line is that they refer to Macbeth as something wicked. This seems obvious to a reader, but this, coming in the scene just before he has Macduff's family killed, is near the height of his wickedness. It is also possible that this slaughter is what they are referring to. Another possibility is that they are referring to what they are about to do as wicked. Telling him more about the prophecy could be considered wicked as it may keep him alive longer to do more evil. The pricking of my thumbs (meaning tingling) is from an old superstition. This book from 1739 says that "The Numbness of the little Finger, and the Starting of the Thumb of the left Hand, portended nothing favourable." So far as I can tell, numbness means numbness and in this case, starting means twitching. This is also backed up by a source that states that "If the nose itches, company is coming. If the thumb itches, it will be unwelcome company." However, the reliability of this site is questionable. This line is probably another of the many added to make the witches appear how King James I would have thought. King James I, was king of England at the time that this play was written and was very superstitious. He believed that witches were real and even wrote a book on it called Daemonologie. To celebrate NZ Opera's new season, Federation chose to promote Verdi's take on this dark plot with a twist on the latter. So how do you create a truly 'paranoid' campaign, one that creates an authentic emotional response from the viewer? Federation managing partner Elizabeth Beatty says, "NZ Opera is rapidly gaining a reputation for shifting perceptions - what opera is about and who it's for. So we needed an equally impactful campaign that would captivate new audiences and opera fans alike. The result is a campaign that inspires people to experience the multi-sensory experience of opera for themselves." The ensuing campaign saw every media channel accuse viewers of noticing it. Using the algorithms of digital retargeting, Macbeth followed internet users, claiming they were following him. In dramatic OOH, Macbeth claimed that viewers were always watching and plotting against him. And on radio, Macbeth accused listeners of eavesdropping on his every waking thought. Creative lead Tony Clewett says, "NZ Opera takes the murderous Macbeth and creates a truly visceral experience. Masses of energy, striking sets, and stirring music. We knew it would appeal to a very wide audience." Targeting a completely different audience, Federation also created a provocative ambush of McDonalds and Burger King, challenging audiences to come and meet the real King. Director of marketing & development at NZ Opera, Rebecca Galloway says, "Like most of those in the Arts, we have been patiently waiting for the crowds to be able to come back. This production of Macbeth is one that we are really excited about and we look forward to welcoming some new faces to opera for the first time."
